The Roger W. Jones Award

for

Executive Leadership

Assuring first-rate leadership by career executives in the Federal government is a high priority issue requiring constant attention. The decision arena for career executives includes complexity, conflicting forces, options, and opportunities to contribute to the National purpose which will be intensified in the Senior Executive Service. One legacy which these senior career executives can leave, however, is a cadre of outstanding managers and senior specialists committed to their own professional growth and development in order to better serve the public interest. Presidential and other administration appointees are uniquely positioned to encourage and evaluate such action by senior career executives.

In furtherance of this compelling purpose, and because of its interest in public affairs, The American University will annually grant the Roger W. Jones Award for Outstanding Executive Leadership to two career executives of the Federal government.

Criteria. The recipients of these unique awards will be selected from among those Federal career executives who have demonstrated:

- superior leadership which resulted in outstanding organizational achievements, and
- a strong commitment to the effective continuity of government by successfully bringing about the development of managers and executives.

Selection of these honor awards will be by a distinguished panel.

The award, a bronze plaque and citation, is presented annually at The American University's Spring Honors Convocation.

Roger W. Jones

Roger W. Jones, for whom this award is named, epitomizes the best among career executives. This exceptional public servant, in both top career and Presidential appointments, greatly influenced the establishment of a climate and structure for improved government operations through the education and training of managers and executives.

In the old Budget Bureau, the Munitions Assignment Board of World War II, the Civil Service Commission, the State Department, the Office of Management and Budget, and as a consultant to successive administrations of both parties and advisor to four Presidents, he demonstrated an extraordinary capacity for excellence and service. For his exceptional contributions to the Nation, Mr. Jones has received national recognition, including the President's Award for Distinguished Federal Civilian Service, the Stockberger Award, and the National Civil Service League Award.
